

Where the Wind Blows: Dandelion on Earth and Comet in Space

In the left picture, a gentle breeze distributes the seeds of a dandelion across a field. In the right picture, a stream of charged particles from the Sun, called the solar wind, forces the tails of the comet to point away from the Sun.

